BENEFITING THE JUNG CENTER

What Matters Most

A conversation with
James Hollis and J. Pittman McGehee

The Jung Center

The question is not to know what is the meaning of life, but what meaning I can give to my life. – The Dalai Lama

What Matters Most

Why are we here? What is the meaning of our existence? Where did I lose the trail? Can I find my way back? If we do not engage in dialogue with these questions that emerge from our depths, then we will live an unconscious, unreflective, accidental life.

Beginning with these insistent questions, two of Houston's most thoughtful teachers explore a fresh concept of a fulfilling life – one that embraces growth over security, engagement versus avoidance, and a recognition that the forces in our lives, far from being accidental, are the heat, the cold, the pressure that temper us into a looking glass through which we can see into the heart of what matters...what really matters.

JAMES HOLLIS, PHD

James Hollis is a Jungian analyst, author of more than a dozen books, and director emeritus of The Jung Center. He is Director of Jungian Studies at Saybrook Graduate School in San Francisco and lectures internationally on depth psychology.

J. PITTMAN McGEHEE, MDIV

J. Pittman McGehee is a Jungian analyst, author, poet and director of the Institute for the Advancement of Psychology and Spirituality. Formerly the Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Pittman is widely known as a lecturer and educator in the field of psychology and religion.
